Russian Federation

A federation is a form of government in which parts of a federal state are state entities with legally defined independence.

A federation is characterized by the presence of territorial entities— federal subjects— that do not possess state sovereignty but have fairly broad powers in conducting domestic policy.

Subjects of the Russian Federation

A constituent entity of the Russian Federation is the name of a top-level territorial unit within the Russian Federation. According to the Constitution of the Russian Federation, Russia consists of equal constituent entities of the Russian Federation.

Part 1 of Article 65 of the Constitution of the Russian Federation contains an exhaustive list and the official name of all subjects of the Russian Federation (89 subjects in total).

Subjects of the Russian Federation – 89 units.

Characteristics of the constituent entities of the Russian Federation

do not have sovereignty

do not have the right to secede before the federal government, the subjects of the Federation are equal

Each subject of the federation, in addition to federal bodies, has its own executive, legislative, and judicial branches of government. Subjects of the federation have two representatives in the upper house of the Russian parliament, the Federation Council. Subjects have the authority to resolve issues assigned by the Constitution to the jurisdiction of the subjects.

the law of a constituent entity of the Russian Federation cannot contradict federal legislation

Citizens of any subject of the Russian Federation have equal fundamental rights and obligations on the territory of the Russian Federation

Formation of a new entity

the population of any foreign state or territory expresses a desire to be accepted into the Russian Federation

a new federal subject is formed on a territory that is part of one or more of the federal subjects named in the Constitution

The procedure for the formation of a new subject is established by the Federal Constitutional Law “On the procedure for admission to the Russian Federation and the formation within it of a new subject of the Russian Federation” dated 17.12.2001 N 6-FKZ.

Subjects of jurisdiction

– is the legally enshrined right and obligation of a government body to adopt legal acts and implement other measures of influence to solve specific tasks of government administration.
